CHRONOLOGY OF US ACTIONS RELATED TO THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT

This fact sheet details the United States government’s actions related to the International Criminal Court (ICC) from the participation of the Clinton administration in early negotiations to the opposition of the Bush administration to the evolving policy of reengagement under the Obama administration.

The Clinton administration was closely involved in the negotiations for the Court and supported it prior to its establishment. Under President Clinton, the US eventually signed the Rome Statute of the ICC, the treaty that established the Court. However, he did not recommend that the US join the ICC until fundamental American concerns about the Court had been addressed.

The Bush administration was initially hostile to the ICC. The Bush administration was primarily concerned about politically motivated ICC prosecutions of Americans, especially US service-members, and that it undermined American sovereignty by claiming the ability to try Americans even while the US is not a party to the Rome Statute. In response to these concerns, the US deactivated the US signature of the Rome Statute and conducted a calculated campaign to undermine the Court. This campaign included enacting legislation such as the American Service-members’ Protection Act (ASPA) and the Nethercutt Amendment, and formation of bilateral immunity agreements (BIAs) with other countries to prevent the transfer of US nationals and other to the ICC. During the second Bush term, US antagonism to the ICC started to wane. The US did not veto a Security Council resolution referring the situation of Darfur, Sudan to the ICC. In addition, Congress repealed all of the anti-ICC sanctions against other countries.

The Obama administration took an approach of positive engagement with the ICC. Upon taking office, it began a formal review of US-ICC policy. It participates in meetings of the ICC’s governing body, the Assembly of States Parties (ASP), and sent a large delegation to the ICC Review Conference in Kampala, Uganda in May-June 2010. It meets with ICC officials to determine how the US can cooperate with the Court. It also co-sponsored and voted for a UN Security Council resolution referral the situation in Libya to the ICC.

The Trump administration has yet to release a clear statement about future policy with the Court. However, several statements from the United States supported the work of the Court in Libya and Sudan.
June 15-July 17, 1998: Delegates from around the world, including the US, meet in Rome at a conference convened by the United Nations to establish a permanent International Criminal Court. It adopts the Rome Statute of the ICC. The US votes against the adoption of the treaty out of concern that the ICC could accuse US nationals of crimes for political reasons.

December 31, 2000: The US signs the Rome Statute on the last day it is open for signature. President Clinton states that he took this step in order to “remain engaged in making the ICC an instrument of impartial and effective justice in the years to come.”

September 24-October 5, 2001: Diplomatic representatives of the Bush administration participate in Eighth Session of Preparatory Commission for the ICC, making a final intervention on the crime of aggression on September 26. It is the last time that the US sends a delegation to official ICC meetings as an observer, which had been a consistent practice under the Clinton administration, until November 2009.

May 6, 2002: Under Secretary of State for Arms Control and International Security, John Bolton sends a note to United Nations Secretary General, Kofi Annan. The note announces the US decision to deactivate their signature to the Rome Statute, thereby suspending its signature and relieving itself of the obligations imposed on signatories not to defeat the object and purpose of a treaty.

July 12, 2002: The UN Security Council unanimously passes Resolution 1422 and expresses its intention to renew it annually. The resolution requests that “...if a case arises involving current or former officials or personnel from a contributing State not a Party to the Rome Statute over acts or omissions relating to a United Nations established or authorized operation, [the ICC] shall for a twelve-month period starting 1 July 2002 not commence or proceed with investigation or prosecution of any such case, unless the Security Council decides otherwise.”

July 23-24, 2002: The American Service-members’ Protection Act (ASPA) is passed by both houses of Congress as an amendment to the Supplemental Appropriations Act of 2002, H.R. 4775. It threatens to cut International Military Education and Training (IMET) and Foreign Military Funds (FMF) aid to nations unwilling to enter into a BIA, subject to waiver by the president. It also includes a second-degree amendment (S.AMDT.3787) by Senator Christopher Dodd (D-CT) incorporated into the text of the ASPA. “Nothing in this title shall prohibit the United States from rendering assistance to international efforts to bring to justice Saddam Hussein, Slobodan Milosevic, Osama bin Laden, other members of Al Qaeda, leaders of Islamic Jihad, and other foreign nationals accused of genocide, war crimes or crimes against humanity.” President George W. Bush signs HR 4775 into law on August 2, 2002.

September 30, 2002: The Council of the European Union states that the US non-surrender agreement does not fall under Article 98 of the Rome Statute. It finds that it would be illegal for States Parties to sign these agreements. The Council further adopts “guiding principles” that require any related agreement to: (1) include appropriate operative provisions ensuring that persons who have committed crimes falling within the jurisdiction of the Court do not enjoy impunity; (2) cover only persons who are not nationals of an ICC State Party; and (3) cover only persons present on the territory of a requested State because they have been sent on official business by a sending state that is party to the agreement.

July 1, 2003: President Bush announces a suspension of military aid to 35 States Parties to the ICC. Waivers for the ASPA prohibition on US military assistance are provided to ICC States Parties that have concluded, or are in the process of concluding, BIA agreements.

August 26, 2003: The US refuses to join a UN Security Council resolution protecting humanitarian aid workers – even after the bombing in Baghdad that killed 22 UN workers – because it refers to the fact that the ICC has explicitly criminalized attacks against aid workers as war crimes. The version that passes, Resolution 1502, instead refers indirectly to “existing prohibitions under international law.”

November 21, 2003: President Bush partially waives military assistance cuts to Bulgaria, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Slovakia, and Slovenia for certain specific projects the President has decided are needed to support the integration of these countries into NATO, or to support Operation “Enduring Freedom” or Operation “Iraqi Freedom”. This action is an attempt to preempt a bipartisan congressional effort to exempt NATO accession countries contributing troops to Iraq and Afghanistan from ASPA cuts. It is the first time that waivers are granted to countries that refuse to sign a BIA.

July 1, 2004: Resolution 1487 expires after US requests for renewal and a US proposal to amend the Resolution to extend for a final 12-month period. The US announces the withdrawal of seven personnel from the UN peacekeeping Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea and two personnel from the UN peacekeeping Mission in Kosovo because the countries involved have not signed BIAs.

December 7, 2004: President Bush signs the omnibus appropriations bill containing the controversial Nethercutt Amendment (H.R. 4818). The revised language of the amendment allows presidential exemptions for NATO, MNNA (major non-NATO allies), and Millennium Fund countries. The Nethercutt Amendment differs from ASPA by adding Economic Support Fund (ESF) aid cuts to ASPA cuts in military aid. It does not have an equivalent to the Dodd Amendment in ASPA.

March 2005: The US begins to see the adverse effects of the ASPA legislation and the BIA campaign. The Department of Defense voices concerns that ASPA has reduced foreign troop training opportunities and hurt the government’s ability to fight terrorism abroad. General Bantz J. Craddock of the US Southern Command states that 11 of the 22 countries affected by sanctions under ASPA are from Latin America, thus “hampering the engagement and professional contact that is an essential element of our regional security cooperation strategy. [...] Extra-hemispheric actors are filling in the void left by restricted US military engagement with partner nations.”

March 31, 2005: The Security Council votes to refer the situation of Darfur, Sudan to the ICC. Resolution 1593 passes 11-0, with four members abstaining: the United States, Algeria, Brazil and China. The US states that it did not veto the referral due to the need for the international community to work together in order to end the impunity in Sudan. The resolution provides for the protection of US nationals from investigation or prosecution and states that the UN will bear none of the costs associated with the referral.

April 2005: “The Darfur Accountability Act” (S. 495) is introduced by Senators Corzine (D-NJ) and Brownback (R-KS). The Act calls for Security Council steps “to ensure prompt prosecution and adjudication of those named by the UN Commission in a competent international court of justice.” Representatives Payne (D-NJ) and Tancredo (R-CO) introduce the House version of the Act (H.R. 1424) in May. The Act passes in the Senate as part of the supplemental appropriations bill.

May 27, 2005: US Deputy Secretary of State, Robert Zoellick, issues remarks on Darfur during a briefing on Sudan. He states that the role of the ICC in Sudan sends “a signal about accountability” and is “a useful deterrence against others and allows us to emphasize a tool about the need to stop violence.”

September 2005: UN member states meet at a World Summit on the UN’s 60th anniversary to discuss reform and the most important issues before it. Under the leadership of new US Ambassador to the UN John Bolton, the US threatens to break consensus on the adoption of a resolution on the outcome of the Summit unless all references to the ICC are deleted from sections covering the struggle against impunity and for accountability in committing atrocities.
Since other countries felt that consensus was essential for a document signed by heads of state and government, but refused to have its discussion of responsibility for atrocities omit the ICC, the result was a resolution without any reference to impunity and accountability.

October 30, 2005: Mexico becomes the 100th nation to ratify the Rome Statute. It rejects a BIA with the United States. Consequently, the US withholds millions of dollars, which would facilitate Mexico’s anti-terror and anti-narcotics training and help to provide anti-terror equipment.

November 1, 2005: Jendayi Frazer, US Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, tells the House International Relations Committee that if the ICC requires assistance in Darfur, the US stands ready to assist. “Ambassador Zoellick ... has made very clear that if we were asked by the ICC for our help, we would try to make sure that this gets pursued fully. To use his words, because we don’t want to see impunity for any of these actors ... we stand ready to assist.”

November 8, 2005: US Deputy Secretary of State Robert Zoellick comments on the situation in Sudan on his way to Kenya to meet with officials to promote security in Darfur. He states that ICC Prosecutor Luis Moreno Ocampo will try to focus on major targets in his investigations.

November 14, 2005: The Nethercutt Amendment to the Fiscal Year 2006 (FY 2006) Foreign Operations spending bill is renewed, continuing the United States’ policy to withhold economic assistance from nations that refuse to sign BIAs. The amendment jeopardizes $326.6 million in US economic assistance to 12 nations.

February 6, 2006: In the 2006 Quadrennial Defense Review Report, the US Department of Defense states that it will “[c]onsider whether the restrictions on the American Service Members Protection Act (ASPA) on IMET [International Military Education and Training] and other foreign assistance programs pertaining to security and the war on terror necessitate adjustment as we continue to advance the aims of the ASPA.”

March 10, 2006: US Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice acknowledges that the military aid cuts to Latin American countries provided for in ASPA are “sort of the same as shooting ourselves in the foot.”

June 14, 2006: US Department of State Legal Adviser, John B. Bellinger III, acknowledges, in a Wall Street Journal interview, that the ICC “has a role to play in the overall system of international justice.”
June 20, 2006: US Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs Jendayi Frazer states at a press roundtable in Entebbe, Uganda that “the ICC indictment [of Joseph Kony] is extremely important, and it is part of the process of accountability and ending impunity.”

July 28, 2006: Representative Eliot L. Engel (D-NY) introduces H.R. 5995 to “repeal the prohibitions on U.S. assistance to countries that are parties to the International Criminal Court.” The 109th Congress does not pursue this act any further.

August 29, 2006: An updated Congressional Research Service Report for Congress entitled U.S. Policy Regarding the International Criminal Court notes that “A recent determination by the ICC’s Chief Prosecutor seems to demonstrate a reluctance to launch an investigation against the United States based on allegations regarding its conduct in Iraq.”

September 8, 2006: US Department of State Legal Adviser John B. Bellinger III explains the current US approach to the Court at the 29th Round Table on Current Problems of International Humanitarian Law in San Remo, Italy, stating that “But even with respect to the ICC, we have been pragmatic. Our concerns about the ICC are well known and do not need to be rehashed here. Obviously we share the goals of the International Criminal Court for international criminal justice and accountability. We have concern only about how the Rome statute was ultimately set up.”

September 10, 2006: Senator John McCain and former Senator Bob Dole write in the Washington Post of the worsening crisis in Darfur. They call on the US government to support international intervention and urge the US to remind the Government of Sudan “that the International Criminal Court has jurisdiction to prosecute war crimes in Darfur and that Sudanese leaders will be held personally accountable for attacks on civilians.”

October 2, 2006: President Bush directs the Secretary of State to waive IMET prohibitions, provided for in ASPA, with respect to 21 nations, which have not signed BIAs. This waiver parallels the IMET amendment to the Defense Appropriations Act.
November 7, 2006: Senator Patrick Leahy (D-VT) tells the Washington Post that “The ICC has refuted its critics, who confidently and wrongly predicted that it would be politicized and manipulated by our enemies to prosecute U.S. soldiers”.

November 28, 2006: President Bush directs the Secretary of State to waive ESF restrictions with respect to 14 nations unwilling to sign BIAs for FY 2006 provided for in the Nethercutt Amendment.

December 27, 2006: US Department of State Legal Adviser, John B. Bellinger III, tells the Associated Press, “At least as a matter of policy, not only do we not oppose the ICC’s investigation and prosecutions in Sudan but we support its investigation and prosecution of those atrocities”.

February 5, 2007: At a Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Human Rights and the Law hearing on genocide and the rule of law, Senator Benjamin L. Cardin (D-MD) states: “I believe that ... the work of the new International Criminal Court (ICC), is critical to deterring future war crimes and forms a key component of the international community’s response to conflict and post-conflict situations.”

February 15, 2007: Congress passes an omnibus “Revised Continuing Appropriations Resolution, 2007”, Public Law 110-5, in place of its usual separate appropriations acts, which does not include the Nethercutt provision. It is unclear, however, whether a future foreign operations appropriations bill will revive the limits on Economic Support Funds to nations unwilling to sign BIAs.

May 2, 2007: White House Press Secretary Tony Snow tells reporters that, regarding the ICC’s arrest warrants for Sudanese leaders, “We very strongly support accountability for those who are responsible for Darfur, and we expect the government of Sudan to comply with the obligations under United Nations Security 1593 to cooperate with the ICC.”

June 6, 2007: In remarks to the Atlantic Commission in The Hague, The Netherlands, US Department of State Legal Adviser John B. Bellinger III states: “over the past couple of years we have worked hard to demonstrate that we share the main goals and values of the Court. We did not oppose the Security Council’s referral of the Darfur situation to the ICC, and have expressed our willingness to consider assisting the ICC Prosecutor’s Darfur work should we receive an appropriate request. We supported the use of ICC facilities for the trial of Charles Taylor, which began this week here in The Hague. These steps reflect our desire to find practical ways to work with ICC supporters to advance our shared goals of promoting international criminal justice. We believe it important that ICC supporters take a similarly practical approach in working with us on these issues, one that reflects respect for our decision not to become a party to the Rome Statute. It is in our common interest to find a modus vivendi on the ICC based on mutual respect for the positions of both sides.”

June 21, 2007: Representative Eliot L. Engel (D-NY) introduces H.R. 2804 “To repeal the prohibitions on United States assistance to countries that are parties to the International Criminal Court.” The bill is referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The proposed bill would eliminate all restrictions on Economic Support Funds (ESF) and Foreign Military Funds (FMF) aid to nations refusing to sign BIAs. Representative Engel introduced a similar bill, H.R. 5995, in the 109th Congress on June 26, 2006.

August 31, 2007: President Bush directs the Secretary of State to waive prohibitions provided for in ASPA with respect to Montenegro. While not mentioned by name, this waiver most likely applies to Foreign Military Funds (FMF) since prohibitions on International Military Education and Training (IMET) funds were repealed by the 2007 Defense Appropriations Act, signed into law on October 17, 2007. (President Bush issued similar waivers with respect to the Comoros and Saint Kitts and Nevis in November 2006.)

September 5, 2007: When discussing ICC arrest warrants for LRA officials, US Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs Jendayi Frazer tells journalists “there needs to be some type of accountability – credible accountability which may include going through a national justice system to satisfy the ICC.”

October 29, 2007: The US House of Representatives passes resolution H.R. 726, drawing attention to the crisis in Darfur—in particular crimes of rape and sexual violence, noting key provisions of the Rome Statute, and calling on the government of Sudan to enforce the arrest warrants issued by the ICC for Ahmad Muhammad Harun and Ali Muhammad Al Abd-Al-Raham.

November 27, 2007: US Deputy Permanent Representative to the UN Alejandro D. Wolff disassociates the US from consensus on the annual UN General Assembly resolution on the ICC and expresses disappointment that the sponsors of the resolution would not include a provision that would recognize that the decision of some states not to become party to the Rome Statute.

December 8, 2007: At the Security Council, US Advisor Jeffrey DeLaurentis speaks on US concerns about the Government of Sudan’s lack of cooperation with the ICC, including their failure to arrest and surrender Ahmad Muhammad Harun and Ali Kushayb. DeLaurentis calls on the Sudanese Government to cooperate fully with the ICC as required by Security Council resolution 1593 (2005).

December 17, 2007: The US Congress approves H.R. 2764, a comprehensive Consolidated Appropriations Act, which reinstates the so-called Nethercutt provision cutting off Economic Support Funds (ESF) to nations unwilling to enter Bilateral Immunity Agreements (BIAs) shielding US nationals from the jurisdiction of the ICC. President Bush signs the bill into law on December 26, 2007. As a result, dozens of US allies may lose millions of dollars in economic assistance and further alienate the US in the world community.

January 22, 2008: The US Congress approves the National Defense Appropriations Act of 2008, H.R. 4986, which eliminates restrictions on Foreign Military Financing (FMF) to nations unwilling to enter into BIAs. President Bush signs the bill into law on January 28, 2008. As a result, the US will no longer threaten nations with the loss of military assistance of any kind – FMF or IMET – for refusal to shield US nationals from the ICC. The amendment leaves in place provisions, which restrict US cooperation with the ICC, and authorize military force to free US nationals from the custody of the ICC.

February 12, 2008: US Deputy Permanent Representative to the UN Alejandro D. Wolff, in a Security Council statement on children and armed conflict, states that the US does not agree that the Security Council should have a general policy or practice of referring cases to the ICC.

March 26, 2008: President Bush certifies, for the purposes of ASPA, that US service members participating in the United Nations-African Union Darfur Mission (UNAMID) are without risk of criminal prosecution by the ICC due to an exemption by Security Council under resolution 1593. The exemption does not binding on the ICC, however, since the powers of the Security Council under Chapter VII of the UN Charter only extend to Members States, not to international organizations.

June 5, 2008: US Permanent Representative to the UN Zalmay Khalilzad, states that the US “strongly believes that those responsible for the acts of genocide, war crimes, and crimes against humanity committed in Darfur must be held accountable and brought to justice” and signals US support for a presidential statement to achieve accountability. According to the New York Times, US Department of State Legal Adviser John B. Bellinger III states, “We accept the reality” of the ICC and that “It is the only game in town for bringing accountability for the atrocities in Darfur.”
June 16, 2008: The US presidency of the UN Security Council issues a Presidential Statement (PRST) adopted by consensus calling on Sudan to cooperate with the ICC, consistent with resolution 1593, including on arrest warrants issued by the Court.

June 19, 2008: The US Presidency of the UN Security Council convenes an open debate on Women, Peace and Security chaired by US Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice in which 27 nations make explicit references to the ICC in their statements. The US introduces Resolution 1820, passed unanimously by the Security Council, which recalls “the inclusion of a range of sexual violence offences in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court”.

June 23, 2008: President Bush directs the Secretary of State to waive ESF restrictions with respect to 14 nations unwilling to sign BIAs provided for in the Nethercutt Amendment.

July 31, 2008: The US breaks with consensus and abstains from voting on UN Security Council Resolution 1828 to renew the Darfur peacekeeping force. They cite a paragraph, which alluded to the intention of some Security Council members to consider deferring the prosecution of President Omar Al Bashir of Sudan for atrocities in Darfur, the subject of an application filed by the ICC Prosecutor on July 14, 2008.

December 21, 2008: US Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice states that the US has “been the country that’s been the most active in resisting calls to interfere with the international criminal court investigation of the leadership [in Sudan], despite the fact that we’re not members of the international court.”

January 16, 2009: Four days before leaving office, President Bush issues a final ESF waiver with respect to 16 nations unwilling to sign BIAs provided for in the Nethercutt Amendment to ensure that they did not lose US economic assistance for FY 2008.

January 20, 2009: President Barack Obama takes office following pledges to assist the ICC on Darfur and to consult with legal and military advisers before deciding whether the US would join the ICC.

January 2009: In response to written questions by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee prior to her confirmation on January 23, US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton states “we will end hostility to towards the ICC, and look for opportunities to encourage effective ICC action in ways that promote US interests by bringing war criminals to justice.”
January 29, 2009: Susan E. Rice, US Ambassador to the UN, signals a shift from the Bush approach to the ICC in her first appearance in the Security Council. She states that that ICC “looks to become an important and credible instrument for trying to hold accountable the senior leadership responsible for atrocities committed in the Congo, Uganda, and Darfur.”

March 11, 2009: President Obama signs into law the annual omnibus appropriations bill, Public Law No. 111-8, which does not renew the expired “Nethercutt Amendment” which cut off ESF to nations unwilling to enter into Bilateral Immunity Agreements (BIAs).

August 6, 2009: Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton says that it is a “great regret” that the US is not a member of the ICC. She says, “We have supported the work of the court and will continue to do so under the Obama Administration.”

August 12, 2009: In a speech at New York University on the United States’ approach at the UN, US Ambassador to the UN Susan E. Rice states that the US will no longer oppose mentions of the International Criminal Court in UN statements and resolutions.

September 30, 2009: The UN Security Council, under the presidency of the US and chaired by US Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton, adopts resolution 1888 concerning sexual violence in armed conflict. The resolution, drafted by the US, breaks with its practice of opposing references to the ICC in UN resolutions, recalls “the inclusion of a range of sexual violence offences in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court...”

October 2, 2009: US Ambassador-at-Large for War Crimes Issues Stephen J. Rapp states that the US policy toward the ICC is under review and that the US is beginning an approach of greater cooperation with the ICC.

November 16, 2009: Ambassador Rapp announces that the US will participate in the upcoming meeting of the ICC’s Assembly of States Parties in The Hague, November 18-26, as well as the May-June 2010 ICC Review Conference in Kampala, Uganda, and the preparations for it.

November 18-26, 2009: The US sends a delegation to the ASP. It marks the first time the US participates in the ASP as an observer, and the first US presence at ICC meetings since September 2001. Ambassador Rapp makes a statement during the general debate on behalf of the US and indicates that the US came to the meeting to “listen and learn.”

January 28, 2010: In speech at the University of Pittsburgh School of Law, Ambassador Rapp states that the US would likely not join the ICC in the “foreseeable future.”
February 12, 2010: Ambassador Rapp announces that the US would assist the ICC to protect witnesses who testify before the Court in its proceedings on Kenya.

March 22-15, 2010: The US participates in a resumed session of the ASP. Ambassador Rapp announces that the US will meet with ICC officials to discuss assistance to the Court. State Department Legal Adviser Harold Koh presented US views on the proposed crime of aggression.

May 24, 2010: President Obama signs into law the Lord’s Resistance Army Disarmament and Northern Uganda Recovery Act of 2009. In his signing statement, he recognizes the ICC’s role in dealing with Lord’s Resistance Army (LRA) atrocities and states that US policy supports bringing the LRA leadership to justice.

May 27, 2010: President Obama issues the US National Security Strategy, which affirms, “we are engaging with State Parties to the Rome Statute on issues of concern and are supporting the ICC’s prosecution of those cases that advance U.S. interests and values, consistent with the requirements of U.S. law.”

May 31-June 11, 2010: The US participates in the Review Conference of the Rome Statute of the ICC in Kampala, Uganda. Following the conference, Legal Adviser Harold Koh tells reporters, “After 12 years, I think we have reset the default on the U.S. relationship with the court from hostility to positive engagement.”

July 14, 2010: President Obama, in a press interview, urges the government of Sudan to cooperate with the ICC following the issuance of an arrest warrant for President Bashir on genocide charges.

November 24, 2010: President Obama calls for leaders of the Lord’s Resistance Army, wanted by the ICC for alleged atrocities in Uganda brought to justice in order to create a lasting peace.

December 6-10, 2010: The US, led by Ambassador Rapp and Legal Adviser Koh participate in the ninth session of the ASP, the first since the Review Conference.

December 15, 2010: President Obama, in a statement, urges the government of Kenya to cooperate with the ICC following the naming of six suspects by the ICC Prosecutor for alleged crimes against humanity.

February 26, 2011: The US co-sponsors and votes in favor of Resolution 1970, adopted unanimously by the UN Security Council, referring the situation in Libya to the ICC.
May 10, 2011: Stephen J. Rapp, US Ambassador-at-Large for War Crimes Issues, says, “The United States respects the right of every country to join the ICC” and has “offered to assist the Prosecutor and Registrar in each of the current cases of the ICC.”

June 16, 2011: In a press statement, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton speaks on US concerns about sexual violence in Libya by Qaddafi’s forces and calls for an investigation into the accounts.

December 12-21, 2011: The US, led by Ambassador Rapp and Legal Adviser Koh, participates in the tenth session of the ASP. On December 15th, Rapp makes a statement, reflecting on US opposition to “invitations, facilitation, or support for travel by President Bashir of Sudan,” and stating that “looks forward to continuing to work with the ICC to identify ways in which we can cooperate on witness protection issues, on a case-by-case basis as consistent with U.S. policy and laws.”

May 16, 2012: US Spokesperson, Victoria Nuland, releases a statement in support of the ICC’s conviction of Thomas Lubanga Dyilo—the ICC’s first conviction. Nuland states that the first conviction is an “important step in providing justice and accountability for the Congolese people.”

October 17, 2012: Ambassador Rice states, "We have actively engaged with the ICC Prosecutor and Registrar to consider how we can support specific prosecutions already underway, and we’ve responded positively to informal requests for assistance." Under current US law, the US cannot provide direct funding to the ICC. In addition, Ambassador Rice raises concerns about the providing UN-assessed funds to the ICC for cases authorized by the UN Security Council.

January 15, 2013: President Obama signs S.2318, the Department of State Rewards Program Update and Technical Corrections Act of 2012, into law by President Obama. His statement says it will "enhance the ability of the U.S. Government to offer monetary rewards for information that leads to the arrest or conviction of foreign nationals accused by international criminal tribunals of atrocity-related crimes, and of individuals involved in transnational organized crime."
March 22, 2013: Referring to the US delivery of Bosco Ntaganda to the ICC after he turned himself in at a US embassy in Rwanda, Secretary of State John Kerry says, "Ultimately, peace and stability in the D.R.C. and the Great Lakes will require the restoration of civil order, justice, and accountability. Ntaganda's expected appearance before the International Criminal Court in The Hague will contribute to that goal, and will also send a strong message to all perpetrators of atrocities that they will be held accountable for their crimes." The ICC issued an arrest for Ntaganda due to his activities in the Democratic Republic of Congo.

April 3, 2013: The State Department announces rewards of up to $5 million for information leading to the arrest, transfer or conviction of ICC suspects Joseph Kony, Okot Odhiambo, Dominic Ongwen, and Sylvestre Mudacumura under the expanded War Crimes Rewards Program.

March 7, 2014: The US applauds the ICC’s work on the DRC cases, and calls for the arrest and delivery of Sylvestre Mudacumura to the ICC.

December 8-17, 2014: Stephen Rapp leads the US delegation at the thirteenth ASP session as an observer state.

February, 2015: In the 2015 National Security Strategy, the Obama administration affirms its support for the ICC: "We will work with the international community to prevent and call to account those responsible for the worst human rights abuses, including through support to the International Criminal Court, consistent with U.S. law and our commitment to protecting our personnel."

November 2015: Jane Stromseth, acting director of the office of global criminal justice leads the US delegation to the fourteenth session of the ASP.
March 21, 2016: Ambassador Samantha Powell, the US Permanent Representative to the UN compliments and emphasizes the importance of the ICC’s work and the Central African Republic’s cooperation with the Court.

June 9, 2016: In a statement at the Security Council, the United States delegation calls for the Security Council to do more to “press Sudanese authorities to fulfill Sudan’s obligation to cooperate fully with the Court and with the Prosecutor.” They also call for other countries to follow their obligations in respect to individuals with outstanding arrest warrants form the Court’s Darfur situation.

September 27, 2016: Mark C. Toner, Deputy Department Spokesperson, provides a favorable US response to the ICC’s guilty verdict of Ahmad Al Faqi Al Mahdi for war crimes involving cultural destruction in Mali. Toner says that the US appreciates the ICC’s work for justice and accountability in Mali

November 16-24, 2016: The US, led by Ambassador Todd Buchwald, participates in the fifteenth session of the ASP. Buchwald gives a statement on November 17th on the role of the US in the Court’s success. Buchwald also criticizes the aggression amendments, saying that there is a “dangerous” uncertainty about the unknowns and implications the amendments will have.

January 25, 2017: The New York Times reveals that a draft executive order would establish a committee to review and make recommendations on defunding international organizations. On the list of organizations to be reviewed for defunding was the ICC, which the US does not and could not fund under current domestic law.

April 10, 2017: White House Press Secretary, Sean Spicer, remarks on a Court that decides whether war crimes have been committed. He states that whether Assad committed war crimes in Syria would be up to a Court to decide. Speculation ensues about whether Spicer was endorsing the ICC.
April/May, 2017: The US withdraws troops from the Africa Command who were committed to the joint effort to capture Joseph Kony, a Lord Resistance Army Leader subject to an outstanding arrest warrant from the ICC. US officials point to a substantial decrease in the number of LRA, even though they did not apprehend Joseph Kony.

May 8, 2017: In response to ICC Prosecutor Fatou Bensouda’s briefing at the Security Council on the situation in Libya, the United States makes a statement of support for the Prosecutor’s work. US Deputy Legal Advisor Stephen Townley calls for states and other actors to arrest transfer to The Hague those actors in the Libya situation who are subject to outstanding warrants from the ICC. It is the first statement on the ICC by the United States under the Trump administration.

May 17, 2017: The US Embassy in Khartoum, Sudan releases a statement that the US “oppose[s] invitations, facilitation, or support for travel by any person subject to outstanding International Criminal Court (ICC) arrest warrants, including President Bashir.” The statement is a response to media attention and speculation about Trump’s attendance at a summit in Saudi Arabia that, news outlets reported, originally included Sudanese president Omar al-Bashir. Bashir has an outstanding ICC arrest warrant.

June 8, 2017: In response to ICC Prosecutor Fatou Bensouda’s briefing at the Security Council on the situation in Libya, US Deputy Representative to the UN, Michelle Sison, delivers a statement of support for ICC Prosecutor Besouda’s work in the situation in Darfur.
